Wert thou like me, in life's low vale, With thee how blest that lot I'd share, With thee I'd fly wher-e-ver gale Could waft, or bound-ing bil-lows bear. But,

The pangs this foolish heart must feel,—
When hope shall be for ever flown,—
No sullen murmur shall reveal,
No selfish murmurs e'er shall own.

Nor will I through life's weary years--

Like a pale drooping mourner move,
While I can think my foolish tears
May wound the heart of him I love.
